

SUNDAY ROAST / PATRICK LEE

Lunch break

Gallerist Patrick Lee has spent more than 15 years immersed in the South Korean art world. During that time he has gone from running the exhibition space in Seoul that he co-founded to heading Gallery Hyundai and, last year, being appointed as director of the first Frieze art fair in Asia. We spoke to the Korean-American about escaping the city, eating out and what's on his reading list.

great Indian restaurant called Indica, which also brews its own beer.

Sunday culture must?

I'm reading two books. One is called Art in the After-Culture by Ben Davis. It's not an easy read but I've been plugging away at it. The other one, Early Christian and Byzantine Art, is published by Phaidon. I'm getting into reading books on religious iconography in art. It's a personal hobby for when I go travelling.

A glass of something you'd recommend?

South Korean soju. There are a lot of great new brands out there. Khee is one

<https://monocle.com/minute/2022/08/14/>